How to answer in interview

The question of interview "Tell me about yourself" often serves as a conversation start-up in working interviews. It is a complicated question, though, because the information that turns out to be able to guide the interviewer to continue considering you as a candidate, or can cause you to pull you out of the list. (Ehow: How to answer "Tell me about you") Remember, this question is often used specifically to test your answer to it. To keep you running, stay away from talking about personal topics. The interviewer does not want to know about your family or your spouse, your hobbies, pets or personal life. The best way to respond to "tell yourself" is to stick to the business. The interviewer wants to know what you did in your career and what do you think you do. To give them the answer they are looking for, it is better to talk about your passed career, things you have realized, and what made you decide to request this position. Include details on the skills you have recited directly with the work you are applying. How to answer "Talk to me about you" A good format to use is the following: Present yourself What is your current state (ie state) Describe what you do at work (or school) Describe one or two things that You have realized or Excel since directly the position of the location for which you have decided to apply for this pose a few sentences, and about 30 seconds should be sufficient to your interviewer a positive idea of who you are and what you did, beyond To put your application in a good context. The following examples show this format: Example 1: My name is Jamie Johnson (1), and I am an elderly at Washington High School (2) where I am preparing to go to college for psychology (3). I am good at speaking in public, and I was a group leader on different school projects (4). I want to get close to the theme of the theme of psychology, so I think I am the receptionist in the doctor's office would be a good step for me (5). Esample 2: I am Kurt Smith (1), and I was a store manager Hardware for seven years (2). I am particularly skilled with electric hardware (3), and previously I was the supervisor for the electric store department (4). I'd like to move more to that industry, so I'm asking you to be an electrician at your electrical repair activity (5). Use this format, you can tell your interviewer of your best abilities, your recent results and because You "request, in a way that sounds organized and logical. The subtext for" tell me about yourself "sometimes, responding to answering this question with your strongest career information is not even enough. in the most labor markets Competitive, the interviewer will be "reads between the lines" while answering, trying to see how tightly your experience fits the position they are trying to fill. In these cases, you must make sure you use the right subtext in your reply. To do This, you must be sure to transmit career information about yourself that will match your goals to their needs. This point is very important And. To set someone that the interviewer needs to hire, you must predict what the interviewer is looking for, decide which parts of your professional experience offer it and adapt your answer to reflect. For example, if you know that the location you are candidating could lead to the management of others, and you worked for the management previously, focusing that in your answer aligns your plans with the objectives of the company, making you an even more attractive candidate.
