(A)   Keylogger

(B)   Ransomware

Correct

B. Ransomware attempts to take control of user's system or data and then demands ransom to return control. Keyloggers capture a user's keystrokes and store them in a file. This file can be automatically sent to an attacker or manually retrieved depending on the keylogger. It's possible that Marge's computer was infected with a Trojan, which created a backdoor. However, not all Trojans or backdoor accounts demand payment as ransom.
