Something went wrong. Bargain with the devil and you may wind up with a golden fiddle, supernatural guitar playing ability, or a room full of gleaming alchemized straw. was war booty and moved to Stockholm. Certainly the devil is a great place to start, though his appearance may strike you as a bit comical, given all the fuss. Around 1229, the Bohemia monastery was burnt down, so it was moved to custody at Cistercians Sedlec Monastery before being acquired by Benedictine Monastery in Břevnov. The Codex Gigas, also known as the Devil's Bible, is famous for two reasons: it is believed to be the world's largest preserved medieval manuscript (Codex Gigas means "giant book") and it contains a large full-page portrait of the Devil. More likely, the work was spread out over 25 to 30 years, with various authors contributing to the different sections. Herman the Recluse, tripping on vapors of the bubbling lead concoction from the cauldron wherein he dreamed of harvesting alchemical gold, scribed this wacky medieval bible with a rad Devil drawing that made it famous. It's actually Rumpelstiltskin's doing, but the by-morning-or-else deadline that drives the Brothers Grimm favorite is not dissimilar to the ultimatum posed to disgraced medieval monk Hermann the Recluse: produce a giant book that glorifies your monastery and includes all human knowledge by sunrise, or we brick you up Cask of Amontillado-style. Follow her @AyunHalliday. Why else would a book as high-minded as the Codex Gigas (Latin for Giant Book) contain a full page glamour portrait of the devil garbed in an ermine loincloth and cherry red claws? A National Geographic documentary concluded that the sprawling manuscript would've required a minimum of 5 years of full-time, single-minded labor. Its uniform size would've required the scribe to rule each page before forming the letters, after which 100 lines a day would have been a reasonable goal.
