The investigation of it is currently focusing on elucidate associated associated patterns and processes Paleozoic glaciations. He is a senior professor of Micropaleontology at the University of Durham. Martin Brasier began to investigate as a marine biologist aboard the HMS Fox in 1970, mapping the microbial ecology of the Caribbean algae reefs and mats. The author is known for the first edition of Microfossils and by the work of him on the early evolution of the biosphere, integrating microfossions, biogeochemical and chemo-detromal from the first signs of life in the arcing to the walrous explosion of multicellular shapes. He maintains a special interest in the metabolism and the evolution of the bacterial and protista, and has worked with NASA in the protocols for the most early life recognition on Earth and saved. He is currently a professor of Paleobiology at the University of Oxford.
