Examples of Autobiographies

Example of an Autobiography:

I, James Smith, was born on September 21, on the first day of autumn in the year 1971. My birthplace is Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada. My middle name is Scott which is my mother's maiden name. My nicknames at home is Jim, and Tigger but in school I was called by many nicknames such as Jimmy, Jimmy, and Smokey. My father was a retired miner in Alberta. He had an automotive mechanics diploma in San Luis School, Aliso, Philippines. He moved to Alberta, Canada when he was 17 years old. He then worked for Sandstone Mining Inc, until retirement. He died of diabetes and heart failure at the age of 70. My mother had a degree in Education. She started working as temporary teacher in different cities in Bisco, Philippines. After getting a permanent position in an elementary school in Santiago city, she then met my dad, dated for 3 years, and got married. After 3 years of marriage, I was born. I am the oldest of 3 children. My younger brother's name is Marlon and my younger sister is Edna.

I can say that the best education I ever had started at home. This was when mommy and daddy taught me the principles in life and values that I still hold strong until this very day. My kindergarten was in Macaday School. I love my first teacher in school. I also remember so well the names of my first classmates and friends in school. My elementary school was a bit far from my home. My dad or mom gave me ride to school. I receive two awards in school being the most responsible student of the month of November and a Chess competition award. I took high school in Ferguson Bay High School. This was the coolest and most enjoyable part of my life...

Autobiography Sample

An autobiography example presented in a simple format is given below. The format provided below is more like a narrative essay.

I was born and brought up in Houston, Texas. Ours is a family of four with my parents, me and my younger brother. The schooling years of my life were toughest. I struggled a lot in my studies. The standardized procedure of education never interested me.

I was an average student throughout my academic life. Extra-curricular activities like sports, drawing, crafts, etc. were my favorite things. I just remember that it was the second semester of 6th grade when I stood first in class. However, it didn't serve any purpose in motivating me to take up studies seriously. I enjoyed understanding the concepts more than just memorizing ready-made notes. After completion of my schooling and college in the science stream, I chose to become a painter. It was a weird decision taken by me at that time. Today, however, I don't regret it at all.

My career in painting began a smoothly and I was more than happy to grab the right opportunity for which I was waiting so long. Today, I am happy with my life and enjoy it to the fullest. The positive

AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL ESSAY: SAMPLE WRITING ASSIGNMENT

The autobiographical essay (called a remembered event essay in the St. Martin's Guide) is similar to the literacy narrative, in that it draws on the students' personal experiences. The main difference is its open-endedness, which appeals to some students and which might make it an easier assignment to adapt to certain ILA sections.

OBJECTIVES: to learn strategies for 1), choosing a significant, narrowed subject; and, generating specific, concrete details; 2). [section-specific ILA goals can be added to these composition objectives]

GOAL: to produce an autobiographical essay that shows rather than tells as it presents a significant main point about you, as an individual.

ASSIGNMENT: Write a 750-1000 word autobiographical essay about a significant event / moment in your life. Your audience for this essay is your classmates in ILA—in other words, other students, more than likely about your same age, who appreciate quality, college-level writing and who want to know something substantial and important about you.

The event / moment that you select might not be earth-shattering, and it might not be exemplary, but that does not mean that it did not leave a lasting impression on you—and cannot leave a lasting impression on your readers. Your purpose is to entertain as well as to instruct, as you teach the audience something about yourself through the use of specific details, narration, and description.

A successful essay will have a narrowed / focused event (a particular moment in time), a clear dominate impression, and a clear main point (significance). Less effective essays will tell a long story without having any focus; they will not answer the question “So What?”

WRITING PROCESS STAGES FOR THE ASSIGNMENT:

Choosing Your Topic: By XXX, email me one paragraph describing the event you plan to write about and why it is important to you. If you can, relate the literacy insight it illustrates.

Drafting: Draft your narrative for the audience described above. Apply the strategies we've discussed about writing effective narratives (see Ch. 2-4 in the St. Martin's Guide): “show” as well as “tell” through descriptive devices (dialogue, metaphors, action verbs, details). Work to make the autobiographical significance of your story clear without tacking on a moral at the end. Aim for a draft that is about 3-4 typed pages. Bring your first draft to class on XX.

Revising: Based on my suggestions in class and / or in a conference, advice from your peers, and your own careful review of your work, revise your draft. I also encourage you to take your draft to the Mellinger Writing Center, as early as possible. As you revise, ask other readers to give you feedback on these general questions:

- 1. Do I create a vivid, specific, detailed picture of myself and the event? Do you find the picture credible? Do you sympathize with me? Why or why not? Where do you want more information?
- 2. What did I learn from this experience? Where do you want more information?
- 3. Did I explain how the experience affected / changed me? Where do you want more information?

Editing: Once you're pleased with the content and organization of your narrative, polish the word choice and proofread for errors in usage and mechanics. Your final draft is due in class on XXX

Wherever he was, I followed him, guided by his gentle hand guiding me. Even he entered the sky and left me alone outside the gates. 2012 The world should end and fortunately this did not happen. But mine came to a change of life to stop. My father passed away in August 31, 2012. During some fans, my father fell ill and with what I never discovered. I still wonder what disease took him. Left with anger and frustration without knowing the truth. But all I remember that traumatic day is to wake up early to watch cartoon and the clearly burned image of my father at the bottom of the stairs after he fell. I was always happy to prove that he lived in castors of shells for my own fears. I felt like a stranger that did not belong. Something inside me did not want people to know that I was suffering. Neither my family, and at one point my relationship with my mother was stained. I did not talk to her about anything and my strong personality put me in many agreements, making me isolate myself even more. The stress of the candidatures at high school, tests and bachelors made me realize that keeping things bottled it was not good for me was the best thing I could find out. Even knowing it was true, I did not think it would work. I did not want to follow my own council. But the 8th Series opened my eyes and heart for people who cared me. This was the last year I was going to spend with my best friend and that brought us closer. We are one another, to tell everything, without leaving secrets. We've always been there for each other. I was relieved to have someone who knows everything good and bad about me and still cared about me. I was finally understanding And get some AAAAAI art.
